Innocent Juliana leaves her state to get away from bullying, and she starts at a new high school on the last day when she arrives in New York city. She's done with being the shy girl, so when she runs into Mickey and meets her friends, all she wants is to fit in. But she doesn't realize who and what they are. They're the teens your parents warned you about. They are the popular kids, they go to countless amount of parties, use drugs, and revolve themselves around bad decisions. Each character has their own story, but will Juliana let peer pressure get to her?
